Call for Papers for the Special Session on

Challenges and Opportunities for a Sustainable Water Management

Around the world the different societies need to promote local measures for carbon neutrality and a new approach of circularity must be incremented, including water, energy, and food production. Climate change, biodiversity losses and the increasing human pressure are the driving forces to achieve a sustainable development. Currently, the water management faces different challenges involving scientific, technological, and social dimensions. The objective of this special session is to present novel advances and disruptive solutions in a multidisciplinary approach towards a sustainable water management.
