

Call for Papers for the Special Session on Water for People, Planet and Prosperity: Challenges and Opportunities

Around the world, different societies need to promote local action for carbon neutrality and a new approach to circularity, including water, energy and food production. Climate change, the loss of biodiversity and increasing human pressure are the driving forces behind sustainable development.

At present, water management is facing challenges with multiple scientific, technological, and social dimensions. The aim of this special session is to present novel advances and innovative solutions in a multidisciplinary approach towards sustainable water management.
